Cathryn A. Reynolds is a member of the firm's Business Law and Nonprofit Organizations Practice Areas. Cate provides counsel to entities and individual clients regarding their commercial law needs, and enjoys working with nonprofit entities on governance, corporate and transactional matters, as well.

Cate's practice involves assisting business owners and other stakeholders in the various stages of a business life cycle. She assists clients at the outset of their business planning by providing guidance on formation and business owner relations, as well as counseling on the various day to day legal needs that arise, including commercial contract negotiation and drafting. She is experienced counseling stakeholders and corporate and non-profit boards, and working directly with executive leadership to provide practical guidance on the legal issues that impact operations. Cate recognizes that corporate governance and management are not static issues, but rather require continued attention and tending over time as organizations grow and develop, and sometimes shift objectives. She also guides clients through complex transactions, such as acquisitions, divestitures, mergers and commercial lending and borrowing arrangements. Her goal is to help clients effectively manage legal issues, rather than allow legal challenges to become a hurdle to success.

Cate is co-chair of the firm's Nonprofit Organizations Practice Area.

Before joining Reid and Riege, Cate practiced for more than ten years with an Am Law 200 firm, where she was a partner in the Business Transactions and Finance practice groups.
